Portfolio Manager Commentary

Throughout the first six months of 2024, high-interest savings account funds in Canada remained an attractive option for investors seeking to preserve capital and earn interest income through a reliable and liquid investment vehicle. The year began with the Bank of Canada (BOC) target overnight rate at a 22-year high of 5.00%<sup>1</sup>. The BOC held interest rates steady at their January, March, and April announcements<sup>2</sup>. Then, in June, they announced a 25 basis points rate cut following a series of encouraging inflation figures, with the Consumer Price Index (CPI) cooling to 2.7% in April, down from 2.9% in March<sup>3</sup>. This announcement would mark the first rate cut in more than 4 years. When discussing the matter, BOC Governor Tiff Macklem said, "We've come a long way in our fight against inflation, and our confidence that inflation will continue to move closer to the 2% target has increased over recent months"<sup>4</sup>.

As inflation and the Canadian job market continue to cool, the likelihood of further rate cuts during the year increases. In fact, during Macklem's remarks at the June meeting, he added, "Looking ahead, we expect inflation to moderate further, though progress over the next year will likely be uneven.". Many economists and Canadian banks expect the BOC could cut rates as many as four times by the end of 2024. Although, the speed of those cuts will likely depend on how quickly peers at the Bank of England and the United States Federal Reserve cut rates<sup>4</sup>.

Regardless of where the BOC target overnight rate is, high interest savings account funds continue to offer liquidity and capital preservation amid uncertain economic conditions, with many Canadian investors relying on these investment vehicles as a reliable source of monthly income while safeguarding against the eroding effects of inflation.
